The British education system

In Britain 95% of children attend _____(1) schools, rather than private schools. Most schools in England and Wales are _____(2), but some areas have single-sex schools. Children start _____(3) school at the age of five, and move to a secondary school when they are 11. /Some areas have selective secondary schools, but most schools are _____(4) schools./ The National _____(5) defines what all _____(6) have to learn, but the _____(7) of each school organises the _____(8) and decides which members of _____(9) teach each class. At the age of 16 all children take their GCSE _____(10) in a number of different _____(11). GCSE _____(12) begin in Year 10 - the children choose which ones they will take two years before the _____ exam. Some subjects, like English and Maths are _____(13) but others like Art or History are _____(14). Some students leave school at 16, but about 50% stay on in the _____(15) or attend a college to do two or three A levels. About 25% go on to _____(16) education at a _____(17) or college when they are _____(18) or older.
